Outline

Throughout the implementation phase of the four macro-regional strategies (MRS), a need has emerged to enhance their information flows both in terms of

- Internal communication: Better exchange of information within the governance mechanisms of MRS, and also across MRS;
- External communication: Provide the wider public (citizens, stakeholders, media) with relevant information about the results and aims of MRS, in order to strengthen a common and shared identity related to the respective macro-region.

In addition to this, MRS bear the capacity to communicate policies to the citizens and thereby contribute to European integration on several levels.

Several projects and initiatives have emerged in order to enhance communication flows related to MRS:

- “Let’s communicate” – a project to support the communication of the EUSBSR;
- Horizontal Action “Capacity” of the EUSBSR supporting the communication flows of the EUSBSR;
- AlpGoV – a project of the Alpine Space Programme that supports i.a. the communication of the EUSALP;
- The EUSAIR Facility Point providing tailor-made capacity building workshops for the governance structures and communication activities for the EUSAIR;
- Communication activities implemented by the former Danube Strategy Point and Priority Area 10 “Institutional Capacity and Cooperation” in the framework of the EUSDR.

However, more can be done in order to provide MRS with more publicity. This also concerns the promotion of MRS in Brussels, e.g. in EU-related media.¹

In relation to this, several events were held in the recent past, among others a conference on media and MRS was held in Portorož (Slovenia) in September 2017, and a session on communication was organized in November 2017 in the framework of the EUSALP forum in Munich. A workshop on capacity building across all four MRS in Riga in February 2018 has shown that both internal and external communication can be considered as key component of capacity building in a macro-regional context. In June 2018, strategic communication was discussed in an EUSALP context and narrowed down to concrete steps.

Objectives

Considering these existing initiatives and the joint annual work plan of Interact, it is proposed to develop a stable and sustainable process/platform for communication in the framework of future capacity building activities for all four MRS, or other relevant activities. Moreover, the workshop intends to establish a platform that fosters and streamlines the communication activities across macro-regional strategies and enhances their exchange of experience.
